This price is beyond the means of the poorer classes of the Chinese, who consume Shan tea imported via Mandalay at 12 annas a visa and rough Canton tea at about 10 annas a pound. No Indian tea is drunk by the Chinese in Upper Burmah. It has been predicted that, when but the carrying out of insurance principles overland communication between India and Burmah is perfected, Assam teas will displace all others in the markets of Western Yunnan. To any one accustomed to drink China tea such a contingency seems most improbable, so greatly different is the Indian product in flavour, strength, and its immediate and after effects are pure, and the base of all is the same, but the ness on the part of insurers and fraud on upon the drinker from the teas of China. LONDON, 2nd September.

Considerable dissatisfaction has been developed within the past few days in the ranks of the Trish party over Mr. Parpell's compact with always attaching to the Royal sign manual by beauty, perhaps, for a torero must be a very Strike Committee ordering the men to resume Mr. Balfour, by virtue of which Ireland is to seoure the endowment of a Roman Catholic University. Although nothing is positively known of the consideration which Mr. Balfour was procession of 50,000 dock labourers and promised in return for this concession, no Irishman believes that the Tory Chief Secretary s influenced by purely disinterested, motives, and that a guid pro quo in the shape of promise of Irish support in some shape for the Tory plans exists, is generally surmised. long letter from Michael Davitt appears in the Pall Mail Gasette this afternoon, in which that gentleman very severely condemns the whole who act with him, in giving countenance to the Irish University scheme of Mr. Balfour. Its acceptance, he says, by the Home Rule party. places them in a ridiculously grotesque light may be said of its merits, deals with a question parliament alone is competent to settle. If such quence of this dispute numbers have ceased a question, he says, as the establishment and in Ireland is not a proper subject for legisliament, then there is no such subject. dream of an Irish parliament is a phantasy, and the Home Rule party should disband

To couple with such a proposal a promiss of a measure of Home Rule for Ireland only intensifies the grotesqueness of the situation, for it may well be asked what sort of Home Rule can it be which excludes from the subjects with which it is to deal a matter of such purely. local concern as an Irish university? It is only too evident, writes Mr. Davitt, that the Parnellites have been entrapped by a conning enemy into affording them assistance in their endeavour to drag a red herring athwart the course of Home Bule just as it is coming within eight of its goal. LONDON, 3rd September. The Freeman's Journal, which claims to have thoroughly informed itself as to the position of the Irish party on the proposed Catholic University scheme, predicts that when the measure is actually brought into the House at the next session Mr. Parnell will not be found among its The Protestant Alliance in England has formulated objections to the proposed Irish

THE BONDMAN. A NEW SAGA, BY HALL CAINE,

AUTHOR OF "THE DEEMSTER," "A SON OF HAGAR THE SHADOW OF A CRIME,"

Now First Published. CHAPTER XX. THE PEACE OATH.

There was short shrift for Red Jason. was tried by the court nearest the spot, and that was the criminal court over which the Bishon in his civil capacity presided, with nine of his neighbours on the bench beside him. From this court an appeal was possible to the Court of the Quarter, and again from the Quarter Court to the High Court of Althing; but appeal in this case there was none, for there was no defence. And because Icelandic law did not allow of the imprisonment of a criminal until after he had been sentenced, an inquest was called forthwith. lest Jason should escape or compass the crime he had attempted. So the Court of Inquiry sat the same night in the wooden shed that served both for Senate and House of Justice.

The snow was now falling heavily, and the hour was late, but the court-house was thronged: It was a little place a plain box, bare, featureless, and chill, with walls, roof, seats of wood, and floor of hard earth. Four short benches were raised, step above step. const the farthest side and on the highest of these the Bishop sat, with three of his colleagues on each of the three rows beneath him. The prisoner stood on a broad stool to the right and the witnesses on a like stool to the left. A rafters by hemp ropes tied about their middle. The floor ran like a stream, and the atmosphere was full of the vapour of the snow that was melting on the people's clothes. Nothing could be ruder than the court-house, but the Court that sat there observed a rule of procedure that was almost an idolatry of form.

The prisoner was called by the name of Jason. son of Stephon Orry, and having answered in voice so hollow that it seemed to come out the earth beneath him, he rose to his place. Hi attitude was dull and impassive, and he seemed hardly to see the restlest crowd that murmured at sight of him. His tall figure stooped, there was a cloud on his strong brow, and a slow fire in his blood-shot eyes, and his red hair, long as a woman's, hung in disordered masses down his worn cheeks to his shoulders. The Bishop, a venerable prelate of great age, looked at him and thought, "That man's heart is dead within

The mouthpiece of the Court was a middle aged man, who was short, had little pieroing eyes square brush of iron gray hair that stood erect scross the top of his corded forehead, and a crisp. clear utterance, like the crackle of a horse's hoofs on the frost.

Jason was charged with an attempt to take the life of Michael Sunlocks, first President of the second Republic. He did not plead and had no defence, and the witnesses against him spokeuniv in answer to the leading questions of the

The first of the witnesses was Greebs herself, and her evidence given in English, was interpreted by an interpreter. All her brave strength was now gone. She trembled visibly. Her eyes were down, her bead was bent, her face was half-hidden by the hood of a cloak she wore, and her tones were barely audible. She had little to say. The prisoner had forced his way into Government House, and there, to her own face. had threatened to take the life of her husband In plain words he had done so, and then made show of going in pursuit of her husband that he might carry out his design. . "Wait." said the Bishop, "your husband was not present?".

No. Said Stasba There was, therefore, no direct violence?"

"And the whole sum of the prisoner's offence so far as you know of it, lies in the use of the words that you have repeated ?" Then, turning to the spokesman of the com-

"I will show that the prisoner is guilty of the essential part of murder. merely to compass the destruction of a life, for there is humicids by misadventure, there is justifiable homicide, and there are the rights, long recognised by Icelandic law, of the avengers of blood. Murder is to kill in secreey and after long-harboured malice, and now, my lord, I shall show that the prisoner has lain in wait to slav the President of the Republic." At that Greebs stood down, and other witnesses followed her. Nearly everyone had been summoned with whom Jason had exchanged words since he landed eight days before. There was the less student who had told him of the drill at the Latin school, the little tailor who had explained the work at the jail, the stuttering doorkeeper at the senate-house, and one of the masons at the fort. Much was made of the fainting in the Cathedral yard on the Sunday morning, and out of the deaf landlady, the Cathedral caretaker, some startling disclosures seemed to be

"Still," said the old Bishop, "I see no over "Good gracious, my lord," said the littl spokesman, "are we to wait until the knife itself has been reddened ?"

"God forbid," said the old Bishop. Then came two witnesses to prove motive The first of them was the tipsy comrade of former days, who had drawn Jason into the drinking-shop. He could say of his own knowledge that Jason was jealous of the new governor. The two were brothers in a sort of way. So people said, and so Jason had told him. They had the same father, but different mothers. Jason's mother had been the daughter of the old governor, who turned his back on her at her marriage. At her death he relented, and tried to find Jeson, but could not, and then took up with Michael Sunlocks. People said that was the beginning of the new governor's fortune. At all events Jason thought he had been supplanted, was very wroth, and swore he would be revenged." The second of the two witnesses pointed to a very different motive. He was one of the three question. Danes, who had twice spoken to Jason—the elderly man of the meek and quiet manner. Though himself loyal to the Icelandic Republic he had been much thrown among its enemies. Jason was one of them; he came here as a spy direct from Copenhagen, and his constant associates were Thomsen, an old, white-headed man living in the High Street, and Polyesen, a young and sallow man, who kept one of the

At this evidence there was a deep murmur among the people, and it was seen that Greeba had risen again to her feet. Her heart burned and stormed within her. She tried to speak but could not. At the same moment Jason turned his bloodshot eyes in her direction, and then her limbs gave way under her, and she sank back with a mosn. The Court misread her emotion, and she was removed. Jason's red eyes followed her constantly.

He had done all he could do, he had sent to gail and she handed over the duty to Oscar, who was her sweetheart. Oscar talked openly of what he was doing, and thus all Reykjavik knew that of a deep and secret joy at the certainty of the tender-hearted young wife of the Governor held communication of some sort with the man whom she had sent to jail.

"This is a case for the Warning, not for punishment, said the Bishop. "It is plainly Bishop turned for the last time to Jason, and better, though neither was he so well as to travel written in our old Law Book that if a man delivered judgment. The sentence of this nor was the snow hard enough to walk upon, threaten to slay another man he shall be warned better, though neither was he so well as to travel for the last time to Jason, and better, though neither was he so well as to travel for the sentence of this nor was the snow hard enough to walk upon, threaten to slay another man he shall be warned better.

It was lawful to question the prisoner, and s e-was-questioned. "Is it true that you have been lying in wa to kill the President P" asked the spokesman, But Jason made no soswer.

"Is it true that you have done so from a de sire for personal vengeance?" No answer. "Or from political motives ?"
